Unlike most members of the Amaterasu, who can trace MechWarrior heritages back centuries, Danni Haag's ancestor first became a MechWarrior during the Clan invasion of the 3050s. A citizen of the Free Rasalhague Republic, her ancestor was horrified when Clan Wolf, along with Clan Ghost Bear, nearly swallowed her beloved State that only 15 years earlier had gained its independence from the Draconis Combine.

As the years passed, Clan Ghost Bear slowly began to seduce the population of the Free Rasalhague Republic into believing that the best course for freedom and protection lay in joining them. Danni's own ancestors wholly supported the union of the Free Rasalhague Republic and the Ghost Bear Dominion, which eventually led to the formation of the Rasalhague Dominion.

However, from her earliest years, Danni was horrified that her people had sold their souls for supposed protection, and joined the small but vocal minority that still seeks to overthrown the Ghost Bears and gain true independence. Forced to leave the Dominion because of her beliefs, she came to know and admire Katana Tormark, who promised to aid her in the future if she would pledge her loyalty and service to Katana now. She has quickly become one of Katana's most capable and ardent supporters.

The Arbalest currently piloted by Danni Haag was actually a gift from the Nova Cats in the Combine to Katana Tormark. This is not only unusual, as the Clans are not known for gifting anything much less a BattleMech, but the fact that Khan Jacali Nostra is even aware of Katana's existence says volumes about Katana's growing power and influence; an influence not only felt in the Republic, but felt in the Combine as well. Why Khan Nostra felt the need to provide a gift is anyone's guess, but it cannot bode well.

As is her usual wont, Katana took said gift and transferred it to Danni Haag, sealing Danni firmly to herself. With its long-range, and significant firepower for a machine its size, Danni has named it "Hellwasp."
