for the Hansen's Roughriders mercenary command offered her all the speed and excitement she could want as a scout hovercraft pilot. Following the collapse of the HPG, for reasons only she knows, Crowley left the Roughriders for the Ghost Legion of the Swordsworn Regards. Kristin—still driven by speed despite a premature onset of arthritis—has steadily risen through the ranks, becoming one of the Legion's most capable hovertank commanders and forward scouts.

Before she became a mercenary, Kristin Crowley was a hovercraft racer whose victories included the 3112 and 3113 Pan-Solaris Opens, a marathon event all but eclipsed today by the Equatus 500. Even then, her obsession with speed was apparent, evidenced by numerous traffic violations in every major city where she has been in residence. An accident in the 3115 Open proved to be the downfall of Crowley's racing career. But on Solaris, those with talent rarely stay unemployed for long. Recognizing her high-speed driving skills and her gift for adapting on the fly, recruiters

Commentary

A classic design first fielded during the First Succession War by the Exeter Organization, the Pegasus scout hovertank has been a favorite recon unit of the Successor States and Periphery powers for centuries. Remodeled in the late 3050s, the new Pegasus became even more effective with the addition of recovered technology. Light and fast, yet amazingly resilient and well armed and possessing advanced sensors and electronic warfare systems, the Pegasus is as effective a scout as it is a fast-strike vehicle.

DC3407-140B ("Peeper") was originally fielded by the Draconis Combine just before the Word of Blake's Jihad, but was captured by Blakists early in the conflict, they made their own modifications. Devlin Stone's resistance commandeered the vehicle and it played a role in a variety of commando actions throughout the remainder of the fighting, and amazingly survived grievous damage on several missions, including the loss of three combat crews, to become part of The Republic's military a decade later.
