over a decade. He immediately went into hiding but reappeared several months later on the world of Marlowe's Rift, where he once again handed the Combine their collective heads on a platter after several weeks of hit-and-run fighting.

After a hiatus, he reappeared on Harrow's Sun, where prepared Combine troops savaged his Legionnaire. His name and bright emerald-clad 'Mech, however, only grew in stature as he escaped a trap in which any other warrior would have perished. Once more he vanished (this time for well over a year; it's believed he was terribly wounded), reappearing in The Republic of the Sphere in the summer of 3133, where he fought a string of solo victories on several planets against roving pirates. For unknown reasons, he appeared on the world of Irian just as the battle for the Marauder II plant began, and he threw in his lot with the Dragon's Fury. Though Katana Tormark surely knows the Hunter's loyalty is loose at best, his battlefield acumen simply cannot be ignored.

Originally exclusive to the Wolf's Dragoons mercenaries, this 'Mech variation eventually sold to an open market after numerous technological upgrades. With the destruction of the Dragoons' production plant on Outreach in the opening months of the Jihad, however, the Free Worlds League purchased the design plans lock, stock, and barrel from the Dragoons. Irian BattleMechs Unlimited retooled the Awesome line on Irian in record time to produce the Marauder II.

In the late 3080s and early 3090s, orders from The Republic of the Sphere shut down many of IBU's lines, and the Marauder II was thought lost to history. Not until late 3133 was it revealed that limited production of the Marauder II line had secretly continued. One of the largest battles in the last generation exploded on the world of Irian in October 3133, with every faction desperate to control the line. The Dragon's Fury gifted this particular 'Mech to the Bounty Hunter for his service; the Hunter has painted part of it emerald green, and he calls it "Noketsuna."

MECH: Marauder II

Very little is known about the man who refers to himself only as "Bounty Hunter"; when asked of his background, he divulges only that he has a cross to bear. Through extensive correlation with extant files, however, the Order believes the man to be Michi Fraser; there is indication that his first name changed, leaving the surname in doubt as well.

What can be verified, however, is his appearance on the world of Misery, between the Draconis Combine and Federated Suns, in late 3130. Literally stealing a Legionnaire from the commander of the on-world Federated Suns forces, he single-handedly defeated an entire lance of Kurita troops, causing a greater shift in balance on Misery than had occurred in
