acumen has many of his comrades silently deriding him as a possible descendant of some manipulative Snow Raven Clan Bloodline—the Clan that completely subverted the Outworlds Alliance government during the Jihad. Even more puzzling is that Chistu has not spoken to these accusations, which would have any other Falcon immediately screaming for a Trial of Grievance.

For a trueborn warrior of Clan Jade Falcon, Jiyl Chistu is uncharacteristically humble and reserved. Though he speaks softly, however, this warrior is an accomplished marksman and personal weapons specialist whose actions speak far more loudly than words. Chistu is also a brilliant strategist, both in the martial arts and on the political landscape of the Jade Falcon. He is apparently so well versed in diplomacy that he has advanced his career without once committing himself to any unreliable, long-standing allies. Such political Clan Jade Falcon's medium-weight Gyrfalcon was developed as part of a Clan-wide revitalization project in the early 3110s. It replaced a number of older designs whose parts had becoming increasingly scarce since the loss of home world ties. Built for speed, firepower, and simplicity, the Gyrfalcon became a common sight in Falcon battle Stars (medium-heavy formations known as Beaks to the Falcon), in which its excellent reach made it a menace to most enemy units even as other designs had to close in.

JF199-16F ("Emerald" to its current pilot) has seen several engagements against Clans Wolf and Hell's Horses since rolling off its Sudeten assembly lines in 3126; it has even carried Jiyl Chistu through his last two Trials of Position. Chistu, an accomplished BattleMech "sniper," particularly favors its energy weapons when engaging hardened targets such as opposing 'Mechs and heavy vehicles, and he is adept at firing even while on the run.
