degrading their mental health. In Delaportas' case, they have given her the distinct sense of godhood whenever she plugs into her 'Mech, which, whenever her temper flares up—an increasingly common occurrence since the implantation—drives her to wreak unbridled destruction.

NAME: MONIC DELAPORTAS

FACTION: Spirit Cats DOB: 08/23/3097
REGIMENT: Purifiers HAIR: Brown
'MECH: Warhammer IIC EYES: Green

Anywhere else in the universe, Monic Delaportas would likely be classified as certifiably insane and then relieved of her BattleMech, but in the veteran Purifiers of the Spirit Cats faction, her erratic—almost manic—behavior is simply considered par for the course. Approaching 40 years old, when many Clanners are put out to pasture, Delaportas has had sophisticated and dangerous enhanced-imaging neural circuitry implanted in her body. The techno-tattoos, nearly invisible amid the chaotic mix of ritual markings she bears, are well known to enhance the effectiveness of Clan warriors while simultaneously

A titan of armor and firepower built for endurance and absolute battlefield superiority, the Warhammer IIC was the Clan upgrade to a design already feared by warriors throughout the Succession Wars. The machine was typically armed with massively powerful particle cannons backed up by short-range missiles and a host of lighter energy weapons; however, variations soon appeared that were even more lethal, including this quadruple-heavy laser model, first fielded by the Smoke Jaguars in their final days.

Captured by the Nova Cats who had sided with the Inner Sphere against the Jaguars, this particular Warhammer IIC (nicknamed "Dobutso" by Delaportas) saw action again during the first Combine-Dominion War in the early 3060s and again during the effort to liberate Luthien and Dieron during the Word of Blake Jihad. Like many other Nova Cats, its warrior followed Stone into his Republic after the war's end.
