within him the soul of Anna Rosse, one of the Nova Cat Clan's founders. He then racked up an incredible string of combat victories to ascend to the rank of Star Captain in charge of a mixed Supernova Trinary.

Angus, though he is somewhat unbalanced during battle, is astonishingly clear minded outside the cockpit, and is something of a strategic and logistical genius. His victories have often been attributed to this trait; he carefully plans each engagement beforehand, anticipating the needs of those under his command before they take the field. It is also known that Angus has not yet completed his own personal journey - one that he believes leads to the coveted post of Oathmaster for the Spirit Cats. In this he has been thus far thwarted by the chaotic Oathmaster Grand Melees, but his commitment to this goal has not diminished.

Compounding Angus' off-field troubles are the ambitions of his underlings, particularly those of Janis Nova Cat. So far, however, Angus' fanatical devotion to the Spirit Cats, and particularly Galaxy Commander Kev Rosse, have protected him from Janis' efforts to usurp his authority in the Purifiers.

Commentary

The Diamond Shark Clan (today known as Clan Sea Fox) conceived the Mad Cat Mk II as a produced-for-sale 'Mech to both Inner Sphere and Clan customers around the time of the Inner Sphere's final victory over the Crusader Clans. Basing the design on the original Mad Cat (known to the Clans as the Timber Wolf), the Sharks upgraded the size, firepower, and armor of the lethal 'Mech and fielded working models after a very brief development period. The Nova Cats became one of the biggest customers of the Diamond Sharks-Sea Foxes, and so it comes as little surprise that this particular Mk II, SF933-02S, originated with a sale to the Cats in the late 3060s. Assigned to the Cats' Delta Galaxy, SF933-02S served in several engagements when the Clan fought alongside Devlin Stone against the Word of Blake Jihad, including the Battle for Benjamin, in which its MechWarrior claimed seven 'Mech and vehicle kills in a single firefight with Blakist-backed mercenaries.

Angus Drummond, the latest warrior to command this fearsome machine, has named it the "Cats' Shield" in reference to his self-perceived role as defender of the Spirit Cats' true destiny.

A fanatic warrior in the Spirit Cats' hypermystical Purifiers, Angus Drummond is the quintessential Nova Cat - young, aggressive, and single-mindedly driven by visions in the name of his spiritual purity. He is especially known for going on vision quests right before battle, and often enters the fray in a nearly delusional state. This state makes him an unpredictable warrior, even to those under his command, as he will fight one day with almost suicidal zeal and another day with cold detachment. Somehow, in spite of this erratic behavior, Angus has not only survived in the Spirit Cats - he has excelled. He won his Bloodname, it is said, in an unaugmented match in which he loudly declared that he carried
