instead. This resulting downgrade of status has led many of his fellow Crusaders to shun him, and it is quite possible that the image he cultivates is a vain effort to reclaim some respect among his comrades. Indeed, apart from his tattoos and fierce expression, this warrior may actually suffer from a severe confidence problem, and he lacks the fanatical devotion of other Crusaders.

With his towering physique and rippling muscles covered in abstract techno-tattoos, most people infer that Jamal Wolf is one of the Steel Wolves' fanatical Elemental troopers. Closer inspection, however, reveals that what appear to be the Clans' dangerous Enhanced Imaging implants are merely cosmetic approximations, designed to produce a fearsome first impression and nothing more. Moreover, though Jamal was indeed bred to serve as part of the Wolves' elite Elemental forces, failed aptitude tests early in his training shunted him to a career as a vehicle commander

The Clan-made BE701 Joust is a powerful medium-weight vehicle design, built for versatility with its excellent mix of firepower, armor, and speed. A combination of laser and ballistic weaponry, all mounted on a wide turret, allows this vehicle to track and target multiple hostile units at once, and provides potent damage against enemies at any range.

JF611-081F was originally fielded by the Jade Falcons in the later years of the Jihad, and served as part of a garrison force in that Clan's occupation zone until Clan Hell's Horses captured it when they launched their own assault on Falcon space. After Horses units took part in Devlin Stone's final push against the fanatics, this vehicle and its crew were among the forces that chose to stay and help Stone form his new Republic. Jamal, its current commander, has given this tank the nickname "Steel Stampede" in honor of its origins.
