for 'Mech combat skills. Sponsored for advanced BattleMech training, Schiller dove into this new opportunity with unexpected enthusiasm, graduated with commendations, and received a posting to a Confederation Reserve Cavalry regiment. Since then, she has apparently become a model Capellan citizen, lending credence to the theory that service to the state can indeed save an otherwise doomed soul.

C. Schiller—her given name is Concetina, though she refuses to use it anymore—is an example of a Capellan undesirable attempting very hard to make good. Schiller was physically and mentally abused as a child, and ran away from home on several occasions. Living on the streets, often as part of a street gang or Triad, she was arrested numerous times until the authorities ultimately gave her the choice of military service or a lifetime in prison. Naturally choosing the former, Schiller's early training for a militia role uncovered an aptitude

The tried-and-true Griffin debuted during the days of the Star League. With its excellent mix of mobility, armor, and firepower, this design survived the rigors of the Succession Wars, taking part in mission roles of every stripe. The popularity of the Griffin spawned countless variants, including serial number CC7650-95L, piloted by C. Schiller. This model combines accurate close-range energy weapons with an equally precise long-range missile rack.

Schiller's Griffin, nicknamed "Doria" (after a close friend from her time on the streets), was manufactured for House Liao some time after the Jihad, and has participated in several minor raids for the glory of the Confederation. Schiller herself has claimed seven kills as its pilot—including two BattleMechs, one of which was a Republic Firestarter. Schiller's combat style favors using jump jets to circumvent local terrain and reach the best cover, then engaging the nearest enemy with alternating energy and missile attacks.
