command of the situation." Whether demonstrating initiative or simply jumping the gun, Altman often attributes his sudden outbursts of action to inspiration or a certain sixth sense. Though many doubt he truly has any gift for clairvoyance, the fact that no major misfortune has yet befallen this eager warrior suggests he is at least very lucky.

Though he comes across as young, reckless, and arrogant, Vincent Altman is an expert MechWarrior for the Capellan Confederation's Warrior House Dai Da Chi. Not quite as brazen as some of his fellow warriors, Altman is excitable and impulsive in words and deeds, both on and off the field. He often goes on the offensive even before a true threat materializes, lunging into arguments and battles with almost reflexive spontaneity. This tendency has earned him more than his fair share of reprimands, but has also won him some begrudging commendations for "taking

The Shen Yi first appeared just a few years after the Jihad, built for heavy fire support, but enhanced by stealth capabilities. Weighing in at 65 tons, with average mobility, a lethal mix of missiles and laser weapons, sensor-deflecting armor, and electronic countermeasures, this 'Mech became the premier fire support unit used by the elite forces of the Capellan Confederation.

CC0327-04A is one of the later Shen Yis to roll off factory lines, and features a variant weapons load that swaps the long-range weaponry of the original model for a more flexible medium-range package. Vincent Altman, its current pilot, has nicknamed this 'Mech "Visioneer," and is particularly fond of using its stealth systems to slip past an enemy's flank in order to hammer at rear guard units.
